Meewasin Welcomes Saskatoon to Fall at Beaver Creek

October 1, 2021

Fall is always a busy time of year at Beaver Creek Conservation Area and there's more to check out than just the colors on the trees.

Beaver Creek Conservation Area has long been a favored spot for Saskatoon residents to take a step back from the city and connect with nature, particularly during the fall. The combination of the beautiful colors and migratory birds is hard to resist. But Meewasin has October events planned, as well.

Shepherd Jared Epp and his flock of sheep will be continuing their conservation grazing demonstrations through October 14. These demos are taking place at both the Northeast Swale and Beaver Creek. Check our online calendar for dates and registration.

When planning a trip to Beaver Creek, it's important to remember that there are no dogs allowed, always bring your own water, and site capacity guidelines remain. Additionally, vaccine verification will also be in place and masks continue to be required to use washroom facilities. And make sure to use Google Maps if you need directions to the conservation area.

Andrea Lafond, CEO of Meewasin commented on fall at Beaver Creek, "Beaver Creek is a marvelous year-round destination, weather permitting, but it's hard to not love the fall. The colors never fail to impress, and it always seems like there's another unexpected bird to spot."
